All of the conduit and track work to Third Street and all underground work has been completed, and the concrete bed for the last half-block of paving was poured yesterday.

The southern half of the street from Tenth to Third has been opened to traffic for some weeks. The northern half has been opened to the western side of Seventh Street. The paving has been laid from Seventh to Fifth and will be opened to travel in a few days, and only two half-blocks of paving remain to be laid on the northern side of the street from Fifth to Third.

Already the Administrative Board has in hand bids for the further westward paving of the street of the same material, and it is expected that a contract will be awarded as soon as the annual budget has been approved—that is, about the middle of March—when the further paving will be done at once, without allowing the job to hang over, as it did last summer, until the best months for such work have passed.
